GOLDEN PLYA EAST.A NEW BRITISH NAVAL ARMED.

Every naval construction of high rank, says Engineering, has its conception of an ideal plan for shipbuilding works, but it falls to the lot of very few to carry it into effect without experiencing some limitations. In the case of the reconstruction of old establishments monetary considerations usually preclude the extensive changes necessary to the perfect plan; and it is only once or twice in a generation that an absolutely new shipbuilding yard is created on a site well suited to the purpose. Now we have a typical case in the new works just completed at Messrs William Beardmore and Co., Limited, on an ideal site on the River Clyde, some eight or nine miles nearer the sea than the city of Glasgow. In the case of this Bairdmore establishment, there was initially a clear conception of the full extent of the requirements—it is intended that the highest class of naval and merchant shipbuilding shall be undertaken—and at the same time it was decided that every well tried system of modern manufacture should be adopted, with a view not only of dealing with the heaviest class of work in the most efficient manner, but also of insuring that the highest degree of economy would be realised.
In extent, the works will be amongst the largest shipbuilding and marine engineering concerns in the Kingdom; they cover an area of nearly 90 acres, and have a river frontage of nearly a mile—to be exact, 4920 feet. The shipbuilding berths have been arranged to take vessels up to 1000 ft. in length, and over 100 ft. in beam. Machine tools have been installed to deal with plates up to 40 ft. in length, 7 ft. 6 in. width, and 3 in. in thickness, and with angles and other sections of framing, &c., of correspondingly heavy proportions. The fitting-out basin is likewise the largest constructed in connection with a private concern, the water area being 74 acres, while one of the cranes in use has proved, in test, capable of carrying a weight of 200 tons, and of placing such loads on vessels of great beam. A large graving dock is also embraced in the scheme. The various machinery shops in the establishment have a total area of 14 acres; all of which have glazed roofs, the natural lighting being everywhere perfect—an important element additive to good work. The establishment also represents in its equipment the best in industrial engineering practice.
The works are entirely operated by electric power, the first installation of generating plant having a capacity of 2800 kilowatts, and the dynamo are here driven entirely by Oechelhauser gas-engines, which are collectively of 4000 horse-power. The gas is supplied from Duff producers.
The waste products of the gas plant are recovered, and it is anticipated, as a consequence of the sale of the residual productions, that the hundreds of electric motors and electric cranes throughout the establishment will be run without involving any working charges.
The by-product will pay the cost required for the gas-producers at present prices. Gas from the producers will be further utilised in the furnaces for heating plates, frames, &c. Air-compressors are installed for working the various pneumatic hammers and for blowing the ship's fire. As a consequence the only boiler in the works will be three small-generators utilised for pumps, &c., necessary for the auxiliaries in connection with the gas-producer plant for working the machinery, automatically changing the producers, and mechanically removing the ashes, &c.; in the arrangement of machine-tools, and in works organisation, the establishment promises to offer many interesting lessons.
